- (d) Ocorian Law may procure the payment of all or any portion of an Invoice Amount out of funds held for the Client concerned in the Client Account and will inform that Client before it does this.

- (e) Ocorian Law will not be liable to account for interest on any funds which are held for a Client in the Client Account.
- (f) If any fees or expenses are charged, or are proposed to be charged, by the bank with which the Client Account is held in relation to a Client's funds or a transaction in respect of some or all of those funds, Ocorian Law may charge that Client for those fees or expenses as a disbursement.
- (g) If Ocorian Law receives a deposit from a Client and subsequently suspects that that Client is engaged in money laundering or another illegal activity, Ocorian Law may refuse to procure a transfer of that deposit, or any part of it, without the prior consent of each relevant authority and prepare and submit any report which it considers necessary in order for it to comply with any applicable Regulation.

- (e) Ocorian Law is entitled to retain and exercise a lien over all or any part of a Client's property, including

- (f) Where a transaction or other matter in relation to which Ocorian Law has provided Services to a Client has not completed, or has not been concluded or finalised, to that Client's satisfaction for a reason which was outside Ocorian Law's control, that Client may not withhold payment of any Invoice Amount in respect of those Services or any portion of that Invoice Amount.

8. Conflicts of interest

However, in certain circumstances Ocorian Law may be able to act for two or more Clients if there is a conflict of interests. In these circumstances, Ocorian Law will:
 - (i) notify each relevant Client of the conflict of interests and of any risk that will arise for that Client if Ocorian Law does not act for it; and
 - (ii) seek each relevant Client's written consent to Ocorian Law's acting for each other relevant Client.

If each relevant Client provides that written consent to Ocorian Law, Ocorian Law may act for each of those Clients in relation to the transaction or other matter concerned despite the conflict of interests.

- (c) Ocorian Law will have no obligation to inform a Client of the nature of any conflict of interests if doing so might, in its opinion, compromise any of its professional duties to another Client.

9. Communication

- (a) Ocorian Law may communicate with each Client (and any Agent of that Client) in writing or by telephone.
- (b) Ocorian Law accepts no liability for any data corruption, interception, computer virus or similar issue which may arise from its communication with a Client.
- (c) Ocorian Law may accept and act upon instructions from any person whom it reasonably believes to be acting on behalf of a Client or as an Agent of a Client.

Ocorian Law will strive to be efficient, timely and responsive in its provision of Services to each Client. However, if a Client has a concern or complaint about any Services, it should raise that concern with, or make that complaint to, the partner of Ocorian Law who is responsible for the provision of those Services.
